Special Editorial: Xiang Liu - the eternity of a character

The numbers speak for themselves. In the Chinese digital sphere, the name Xiang Liu continues to resonate with remarkable strength. The hashtag #相柳 (Xiang Liu) has surpassed 10 billion views, while #檀健次相柳 (Tan Jian Ci as Xiang Liu) has accumulated 4,31 billion, and #相柳檀健次 (Xiang Liu – Tan Jian Ci) has reached 1,62 billion. Other tags related to the character and the narrative of “Lost You Forever”, such as #长相思相柳 (Xiang Liu in “Lost You Forever”) and #防风邶 (Fangfeng Bei, the character’s human identity), have gathered 1,13 billion and 1,95 billion views respectively.

More than just metrics, these numbers reveal something rare: the lasting presence of a character in the collective memory of the audience. Xiang Liu no longer belongs only to the moment when the drama aired. He has crossed the boundaries of the screen and entered the cultural imagination of the fandom.

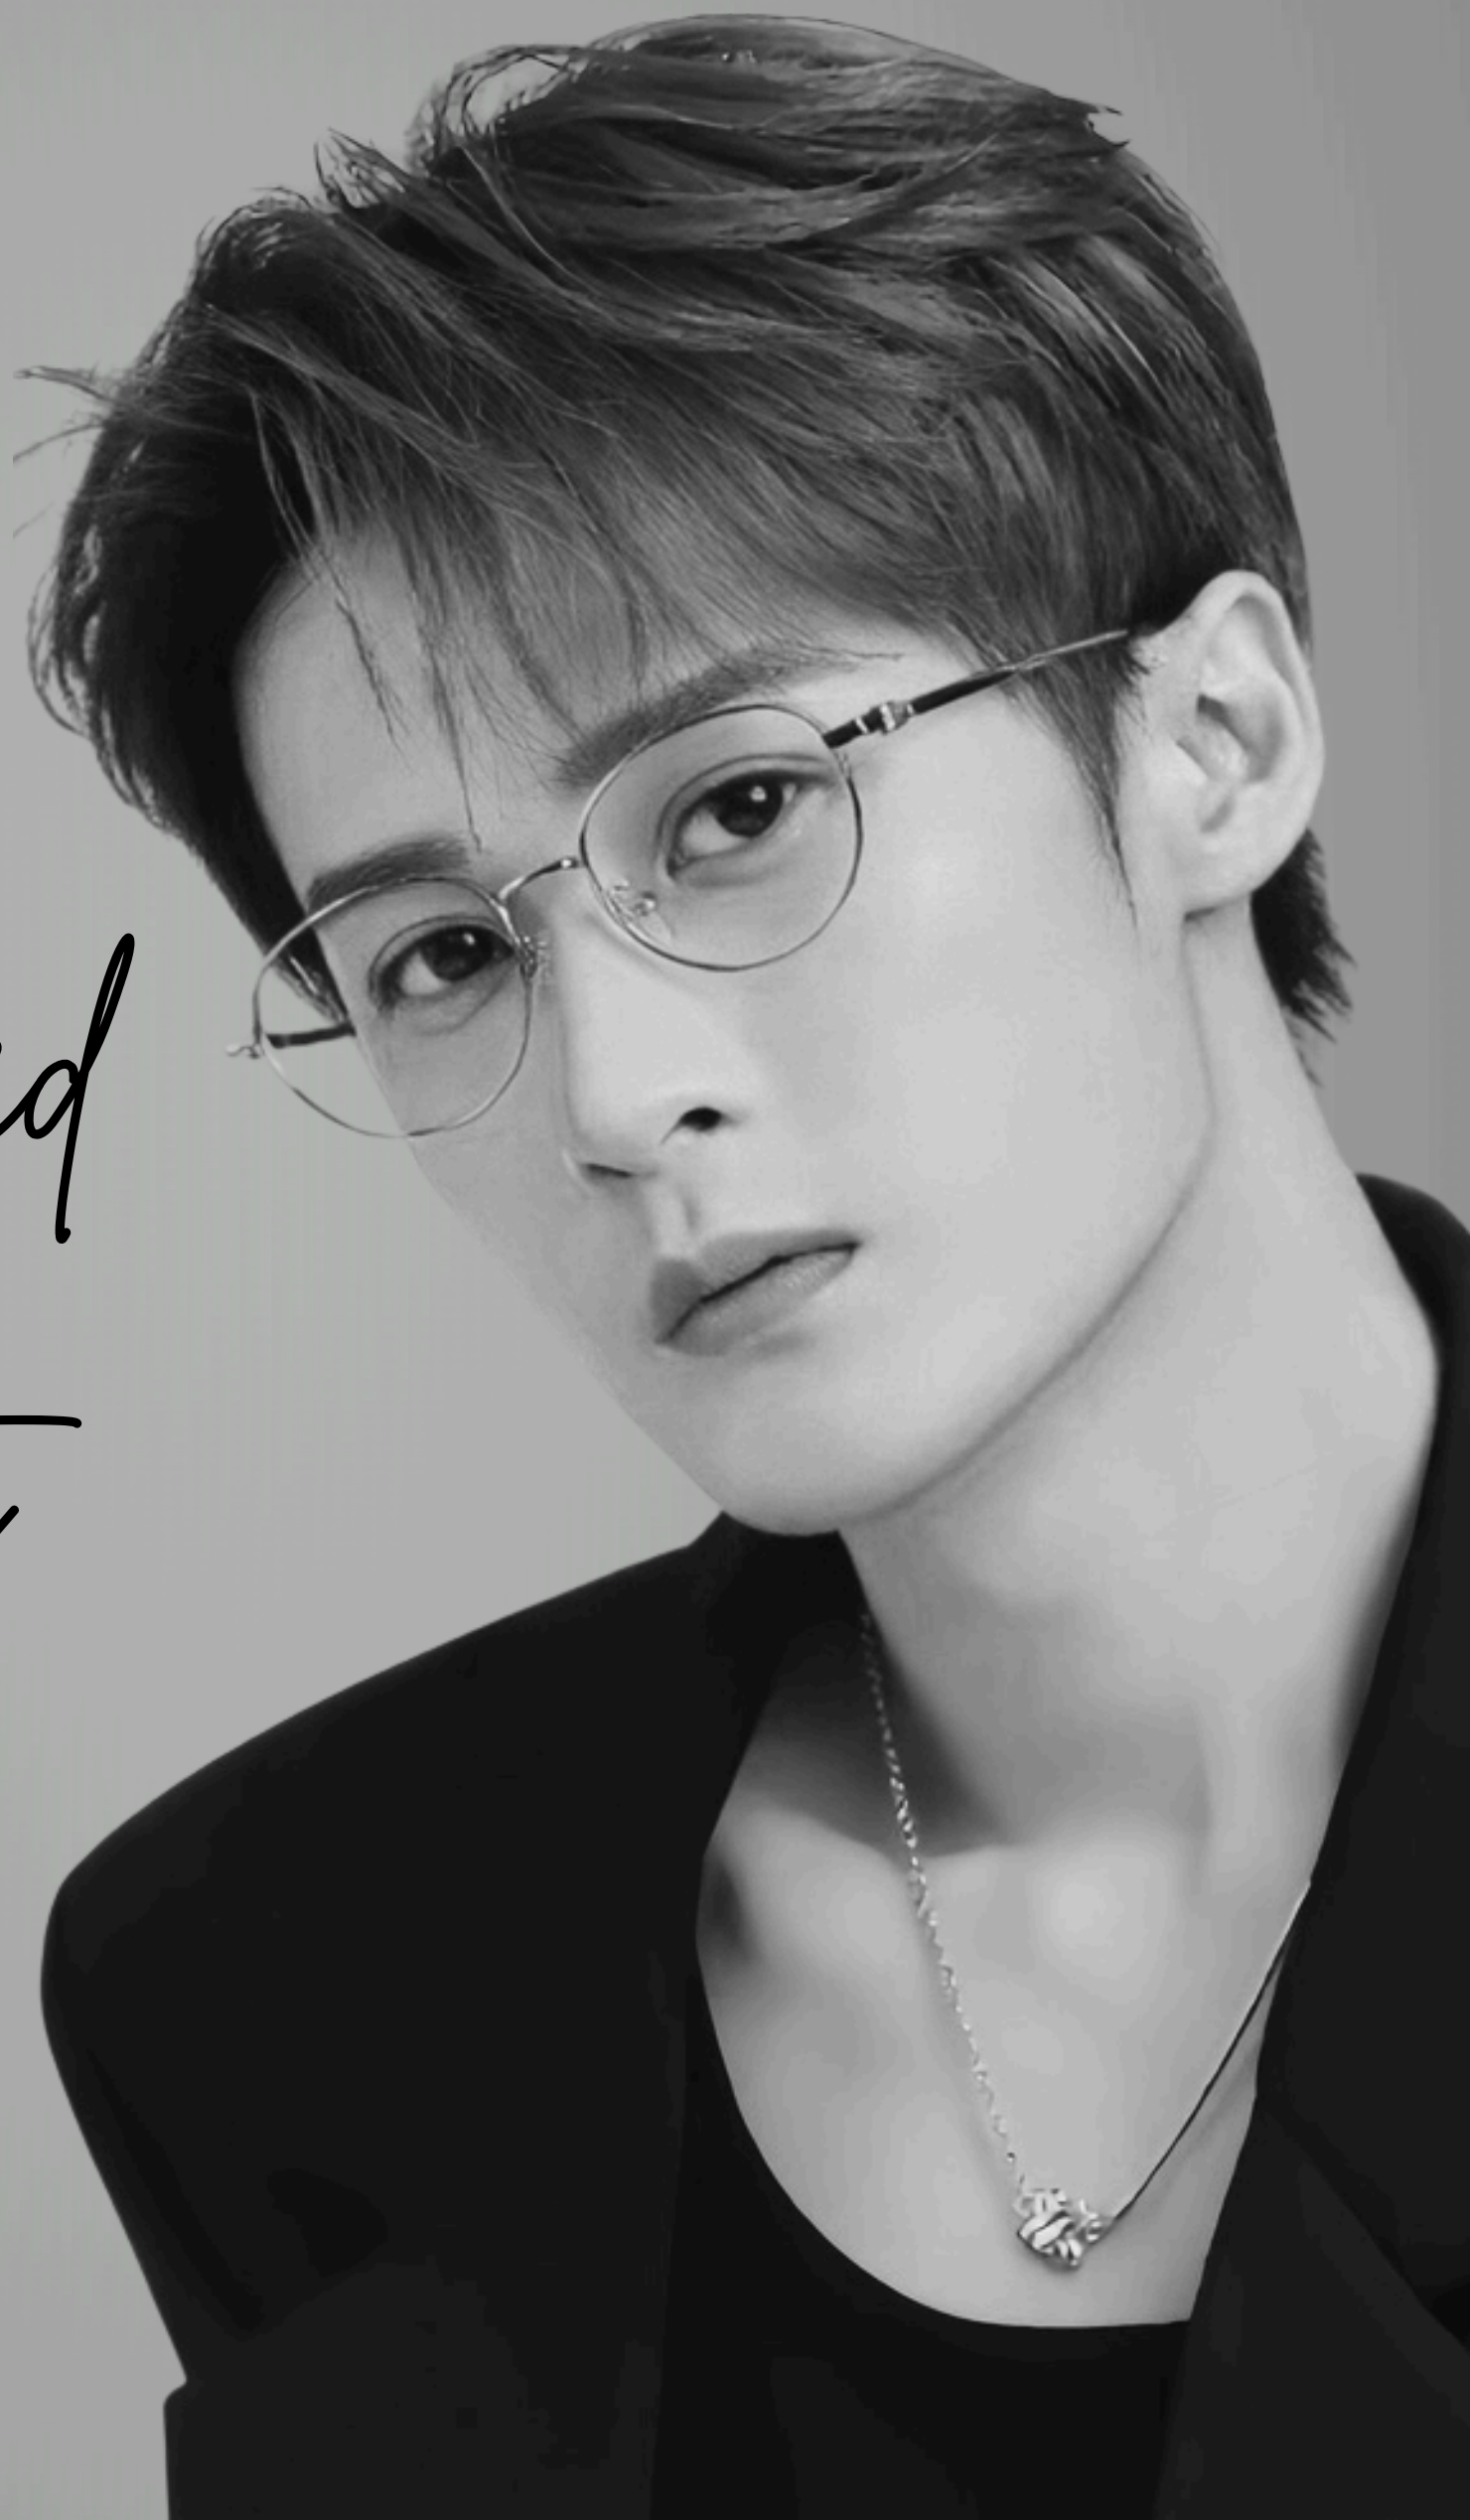

Portrayed by Tan Jian Ci in the drama “Lost You Forever”, Xiang Liu became a figure marked by emotional complexity, tragic loyalty, and an almost mythical aura. It is a character that does not end with the original narrative; he continues to be reinterpreted, remembered, and celebrated through countless posts, edits, and discussions online.

In this sense, Xiang Liu has achieved something few characters ever do: a form of symbolic eternity. As the numbers keep growing and new viewers continue to discover his story, the white-haired general remains alive — not only as part of a drama, but as an unforgettable archetype of contemporary Chinese fiction.
